During the early part of July, the US aid officials in Pakistan paid a visit to a library in Gilgit Baltistan. They provided funds to upgrade the library out of the Ambassador's Fund Programme. The frequent visits by US officials to the PoK starting with the US embassy officials' delegation visit in May- June 2012 has been discussed widely in the media. This was closely followed by the visit of the US Ambassador Cameron Munter to the so called AJK in mid June 2012. Simultaneously, there were reports that China might set up a Consulate in Gilgit Baltistan. This possibility was later denied by Chinese officials. Nonetheless, some kind of geopolitical manoeuvring can be perceived in such developments.

There are indications that the US interest in PoK has not got down very well with Pakistan. For instance, a report in the current issue notes how a local official in Gilgit Baltistan was suspended for hosting dinner to the visiting US officials. The report states that Pakistani authorities were keen to know what had transpired between them during the dinner. This incident reflects the extent and nature of Pakistan's scepticism regarding US intentions particularly in PoK. Conversely, Pakistan is totally comfortable with the Chinese forays in the PoK and in fact supporting every measure to ensure Chinese presence in the region.

The overall situation in Gilgit Baltistan region is relatively calm after the sectarian clashes which began earlier this year. Efforts have been undertaken by the local people to bring about harmony and peace between the rival sects. Meanwhile, the Prime Minister of Pakistan, Raja Pervez Ashraf has acknowledged that maintaining law and order in Gilgit Baltistan is on priority.

July 4, 2012

NEW DELHI: The recent visit of a three-member delegation of the US Embassy officials based in Pakistan to Gilgit-Baltistan has unnerved the Pakistan establishment. The American delegation that visited Gilgit-Baltistan included Lisa Buzenos, political/economic Officer, Kimberly Phelan, political officer, and Khalid Javed, security advisor.
