Defeat of Mahinda Rajapaksa by his fellow party member Maithripala Sirisena in the January 8 Presidential elections came as a surprise to many. Though, Mahinda Rajapaksa was criticised for his authoritarian style of functioning by many both at home and abroad, and hoped to see a change of regime in the island, nobody thought that he could be defeated in a free and fair election. Media report suggested that an attempt was made to declare emergency to derail the election process, but the transition of power was peaceful. There is a hope that with the change of regime things will move in the right direction in Sri Lanka.

Political uncertainties are looming large in Bangladesh and Nepal. Confinement of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) chief Khaleda Zia to her Gulshan office by the law enforcers for two weeks led to sporadic violence in the country. She was confined to stop the BNP from holding a rally to denounce the one-sided parliamentary election held exactly a year ago on January 5, 2014. Ruling Awami League (AL) however, celebrated January 5 as the "victory day for democracy". This resulted in violent clashes between the BNP and AL cadres on the streets. Hundreds of people have lost their lives due to the ongoing violence in the country. Despite the concerns of the international community, neither the BNP nor the AL is ready for unconditional talk to stop the violence.

Constituent Assembly (CA) of Nepal has again failed to meet the deadline to promulgate the new constitution on January 22, 2015 as it could not resolve the disputed issues. The ruling parties wanted to promulgate the new constitution through voting, but the 19-party opposition block led by the UCPN (Maoist) has insisted on forging a political consensus on the disputed issues. Though the ruling party has said that it would follow the peaceful and democratic means outlined in the Interim Constitution to promulgate the new constitution, it also hinted that CA cannot wait indefinitely for generating a consensus. In this situation, there is little chance that Nepal will get a new constitution soon.

Afghanistan security forces became very active to take on the militants after the security transition from NATO forces. The Afghan national security forces are however instructed to take all necessary measures to respect the Islamic values, the Afghan culture, Afghan constitution and other laws of the country while executing special military operations.

The region is going through an interesting period. The January issue has outlined some of the interesting developments during the month in seven South Asian countries.

Initially, the House had rejected the budget for what they called “unfair and unbalanced” fund allocations. Another reason MPs had rejected the budget was the withdrawal of 443 incomplete projects, something the MPs called a wastage of millions of dollars. The approved budget now includes all the incomplete projects; however, no new development project has been considered for the next year. The House rejected former President Hamid Karzai’s decree to pay the salaries of his advisers for five years after the end of their tenure. Head of the Wolesi Jirga’s Finance Commission, Amir Khan Yaar, said 135 billion of the budget would be paid from the domestic revenues, while the rest of them would be paid from foreign aids.

CA failed to meet the deadline to promulgate the new constitution⁴⁹

The Constituent Assembly (CA) of Nepal failed to meet the deadline to promulgate the new constitution on January 22, 2015 as it could not resolve the disputed issues. Among the disputed issues ethnicity based federalism continues to dominate the discourse with members of Nepali Congress and CPN-UML categorically speaking against such federation. They are also averse to the idea of separating hill and Tarai as suggested by the Madhes-centric parties. They have pitched for breaking the five districts of Madhes that are at heart of dispute—Jhapa, Morang, Sunsari, Kailali and Kanchanpur. In this situations, the ruling parties' wanted to promulgate the new constitution through voting, but the 19-party block led by the UCPN (Maoist) has insisted on forging consensus on disputed issues.

The UN Under Secretary General for Political Affairs, Jeffrey Feltman, has strongly encouraged the political leaders in Nepal to conclude the constitution drafting process through compromise, flexibility and inclusivity. Noting that there is no possibility of one hundred percent consensus, Feltman has said that the parties should try to forge a broad consensus. Feltman met with President Ram Baran Yadav, Prime Minister Sushil Koirala, CPN-UML Chairman K.P. Sharma Oli, UCPN (Maoist) Chairman Pushpa Kamal Dahal, CA Chairman Subas Nembang, Foreign Minister Mahendra Bahadur Pandey and senior leaders from Madhes-based parties, among others.

more for consensus in statute drafting. The government side, in an implied way, sought the support of the international community for its “democratic efforts and process” in the CA towards preparing a draft of the new statute. Mahat said the ruling parties would follow the peaceful and democratic means outlined in the Interim Constitution to promulgate the new constitution. Dialogue and voting will go hand in hand “as we cannot wait indefinitely for consensus,” said Mahat.

Questionnaire committee formed by the Constituent Assembly⁵²

The questionnaire committee formed by Constituent Assembly Chairman Subash Nembang began its work without the participation of the opposition parties on January 31. Likewise, Rastriya Prajatantra Party’s Deepak Bohora and Dilnath Giri and independent lawmaker Attar Kamaal Musalman are also the members of the sub-committee. Opposition parties have refused to be a part of the questionnaire committee, purported to resolve the disputed issues of the new constitution, as they blame the ruling parties of bypassing the oppositions by following the CA process and disregarding the spirit of consensus because of their numerical strength in the CA. Prime Minister Sushil Koirala meanwhile, has started holding one-on-one parleys with the opposition parties including UCPN (Maoist).

A total of 11 road projects are being financed by the second line of credit extended to Nepal by India. The other three projects are Lamosanghu-Jiri, Balkhu-Dakshinkali and Lumbini Ring Road. In its World Report 2015, the New York-based human rights body said that the new coalition government of Nepali Congress and CPN-UML made no progress in these areas. The report mentioned that the transitional justice act that was formulated to investigate the cases of serious human rights violations largely replicates the provisions that were struck down as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. HRW has also expressed deep concern that an estimated 4 million people in Nepal have been denied citizenship due to flawed laws.

Draft of Low Carbon Economic Development Strategy made public⁶⁰

The government of Nepal has made public a draft of Low Carbon Economic Development Strategy on January 27 that encompasses promotion and adoption of clean energy technologies to boost economic development in a sustainable manner. The strategy is a part of the government's continued efforts towards low-emission and climate-resilient economic growth through clean energy technologies such as hydropower and biogas, and help achieve the low-carbon development path. The Ministry of Science, Technology and Environment (MoSTE) prepared the strategy under the Nepal Climate Change Support Programme (NCCSP) to make the country self-reliant on clean energy by 2022 and achieve high economic development through green technologies by 2030. The draft focuses on hydropower development as the backbone of the energy system to achieve sustainable economic growth in the long term. Since Nepal's contribution to the global greenhouse gas emission is negligible, there is no compulsion to reduce emissions under the United Nation's Framework Convention on Climate Change. The fossil fuel consumption, one of the key contributors to climate change, is only 12 percent of the total energy consumption in Nepal. Authorities, however, said actions are required to limit harmful emissions by promoting cleaner technologies as climate change is already impacting various sectors, including agriculture, energy, forests, biodiversity, tourism and physical infrastructures.

Sushma Swaraj rejects Sartaj's stand on border shootings⁶³

A day after India rejected Pakistani allegations that Border Security Force (BSF) had opened fire on Pakistan Rangers who had come for a flag meeting in the Jammu sector, External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj sent a detailed letter to Sartaj Aziz on the events of December 31. Reportedly, in her written response Swaraj said that a BSF patrol had come under fire from a Pakistani border post in the area, which had resulted in the death of one Indian jawan, and serious injuries to another, and that had led to Indian troops opening "defensive fire". Pakistan on the other hand, had said that two Punjab Rangers had been shot in the Zafarwal sector on the Pakistani side, when they had been invited for a flag meeting to discuss ceasefire violations and Indian firing had prevented medical attention from reaching them, calling it a violation of international norms and a "cold blooded killing". In her response, Swaraj said "at no stage did the Indian side seek any platoon level contact under a white flag as was suggested in the communication". Swaraj also said that despite Indian messages "consistently" calling for firing to stop, Pakistani commanders continued to fire on Indian border posts. Pakistan had demanded an immediate inquiry into the incident and threatened that the incident would jeopardise the ceasefire at the LoC and International Border. In her response, Swaraj said India had "always adhered by the mechanisms that have been evolved to ensure peace and tranquillity on the International Border and Line of Control and would continue to do so.

The United States said that no funds have been issued to Pakistan from the Kerry-Lugar-Berman provision since 2013. At a news briefing at the State Department, spokesperson Jen Psaki also rejected an Indian suggestion that it had issued a certification to Pakistan. The Ministry of Finance of the government of Pakistan announced in Islamabad that the US Congress had cleared an instalment of $532 million of civilian aid to Pakistan from the Kerry-Lugar-Berman bill. "Congress has not been notified of a request, Congress has not approved a request," Psaki told the briefing when asked to comment on statements issued in Islamabad and New Delhi. She noted that some media reports had also suggested that an approval has been made in the past, which was incorrect, as no approval has been made from the Kerry-Lugar-Berman bill since 2013. It moreover comes as Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif has stated his resolve to go forward with the establishment of military courts come what may. Military courts have become a subject of controversy with certain political parties expressing reservations on their proposed establishment. The Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) has informed the Islamabad High Court (IHC) that two countries whose citizens were killed in the Mumbai attacks have been seeking custody of Zakiur Rehman Lakhvi, the alleged mastermind of the 2008 attacks. During the hearing of an appeal filed by the FIA against the post-arrest bail granted to Lakhvi, FIA's prosecutor Chaudhry Azhar requested an IHC division bench, comprising Justice Noorul Haq N. Qureshi and Justice Shaukat Aziz Siddiqui, for early decision on the appeal. Justice Siddiqui, however, remarked that if the government was in a hurry it could take the case to a military court. The bench observed that diplomatic affairs were a domain of the federal government and it would not affect the court's proceedings. According to media reports, the United States and the United Kingdom have written to the Pakistan government for custody of Lakhvi. On December 18, an anti-terrorism court of Islamabad granted post-arrest bail to Lakhvi in the Mumbai attacks case. However, the government detained him under the Maintenance of Public Order for one month. Following expiry of the period, the government extended the detention for another month. While hearing the FIA's bail cancellation application, the IHC bench remarked that at last hearing Lakhvi was issued notices for reply, but the court has not received the compliance report regarding the services of notices to the accused as yet. The IHC bench then re-issued notices to Lakhvi and directed the Superintendent of Adiala jail to submit compliance report.
