PROVINCIAL POLITICS

Karachi shuts down as MQM calls to mourn killed workers, Dawn, May<sup>2</sup>

The country's financial capital was shut down due to a call for observing a 'day of mourning' by the MQM against extrajudicial killings of its party members. The party has called for a day of mourning in protest against the 'extrajudicial killing' of four MQM workers shot dead on May 1. On MQM's appeal to observe a day of mourning, traders closed down their businesses, commercial centers and shops in Karachi.

Sindh Rangers tasks special unit to probe MQM allegations, Dawn, May<sup>2</sup>

Taking the allegations leveled by the MQM into account, the Sindh Rangers has tasked a special unit to probe the party's claims that personnel from the paramilitary force were involved in the "extrajudicial killing" of four MQM workers. A spokesman for the Sindh Rangers said in a statement that the unit would investigate the claims of the party and legal action would be taken against those found responsible of using the force's uniforms for the purpose.

MQM stages walkout from NA over killing of workers, The News, May<sup>6</sup>

MQM on May 5 staged a walkout from the National Assembly as protest against the killing of its workers in Karachi. MQM members walked out after their colleague Abdul Rashid Godal completed his speech on the law and order situation in the country. Godal said that four MQM workers were subjected to severe torture and shot dead by personnel of a law enforcing agency who were clad in plain clothes. "The MQM workers were not criminals, they were students," he said. He said the ongoing operation in Karachi was targeted against the people of the city and the

Many Peshawarites quit PTI, block GT Road over sackings, Dawn, May 6<sup>4</sup>

PTI office-bearers in 10 union councils of the provincial capital on May 5 announced resignation from their offices to protest the recent sacking of Yaseen Khalil as adviser to the chief minister. Also in the day, some PTI activists took out a rally and blocked GT Road near the Lahore Bus Terminal against the removal of Shaukat Yousufzai as provincial minister. Former Nazim Gul Bashir Khalil told reporters at the Peshawar Press Club that the PTI workers had set the May 4 deadline for the reinstatement of Yaseen Khalil as adviser to the chief minister but neither the PTI leadership nor the provincial government heeded it forcing them to come onto the streets.

PPP says no to PTI's call of May 11 protests, Dawn, May 7<sup>5</sup>

Terming the PTI's protest call an attempt to spread anarchy, PPP has categorically said no to politics of agitation which they say may be seen as leading to destabilizing the democratic structure of the country. "The party has very serious reservations about the general elections 2013 and believes that invisible hands were at play to ensure pre-determined results, but it will not join any agitation or movement to upset the democratic structure," PPP spokesman Senator Farhatullah Babar quoted party's co-chairman Asif Ali Zardari as saying.

Hashmi says will stand by Nawaz for sake of democracy, The News, May 7<sup>6</sup>

PTI leader Javed Hashmi has said that he would fight against those who hatch conspiracies against democracy. Talking part in the discussion on the law and order situation in the National Assembly here Wednesday, Javed Hashmi said if there was need to stand by PM Nawaz Sharif for the sake of democracy he would do so.

Imran Khan warns government not to create hurdles for May 11 protest rally, The Nation, May 7<sup>7</sup>

Imran Khan today warned the government to sever circumstances if it tried to stop PTI's peaceful protest against rigging on May 11. Addressing to press conference, PTI chief said there was no other way left for them but to come on the streets as they have been knocking every door against the rigging in last general elections since a year, but no one was giving them justice. Khan said, he had gone to courts, tribunals,

'Pakistan's defence spending lowest in region', Dawn, May 20<sup>50</sup>

The Senate defence committee was informed by the ministry of defence that Pakistan's defence budget is the lowest in the region despite its location in the red zone in terms of growing threats to its security. "Pakistan's defence allocation (US$5.7 billion approximately) is the lowest as compared to rising defence budget of India US$37.256 billion, China $115 billion, and Turkey $19.1 billion," Additional Secretary Ministry of defence Air Vice Marshal Arshad Quddus told the committee meeting, which was specially called for the defence budget briefing. According to the United Nations, Pakistan had a gross domestic product of US $215 billion in the year 2012. In comparison, GDP for Turkey was recorded at $788 billion, India at $1,875bn, and China at $8,358bn. "Pakistan Army gets 48 per cent of the whole defence budget while 20pc goes to Pakistan Air force and Navy gets only 10pc," the senior Air force officer said.

EDITORIAS AND OPINIONS

Civil-military 'twisters', Shamshad Ahmad, The News, May 1<sup>53</sup>

If anything, the recent civil-military fracas riding on wild media hype once again showed the fragility of our political structure. This is not the first time we found ourselves divided as a nation without even trying to understand what is wrong with us. We are in the habit of running after symptoms paying no attention to the actual disease in our ailing body that with every change of weather keeps erupting into convulsive seizures. We were born with this congenital disease. Our failures in governance, economy, institutional integrity, social justice and law and order are all its symptoms. [...] Instead of looking at the military as an adversarial threat, the civilian leadership should be savvy enough to consider an institutional asset for itself and for the country's strength. Without security, the concept of welfare state is a mere dream. Unfortunately, in the past, if there were instances of military intervention, it was only because the civilian setups were invariably devoid of requisite strategic vision or talent in their political cadres. We have gone through periods of military rule but admittedly also remained without genuine democracy even when we had few democratic openings under 'elected' leaders. Our politicians know this embarrassing reality; yet they never made any effort to practice genuine democracy. In fact, we saw quite a few of them being 'cycled' through military cradles. This weakness invariably became their bête noire and kept haunting them in their political careers.

[...] Islamabad's relations with London, which could take on a more ominous tone in their future. On the eve of PM Sharif's visit, a group of British MPs making up the International Development Committee released a rather damaging report asking if British aid was really helping fight extremism in Pakistan. This, of course, is the purpose why aid goes over from the UK to Pakistan, with Islamabad being the biggest recipient of assistance from that country in the world. The MPs asked if the 446 million pounds allocated for Pakistan this year would really come to any good at all. A debate on this is really not something Pakistan needs at a time when it is desperately short of funds and requires all the help it can get from any quarter.

General Sharif's welcome speech, Express Tribune, May 2<sup>55</sup>

[...] General Sharif was pretty unequivocal in stating that this was not the case when he said "the Pakistan Army supports any endeavour for the elimination of terrorism and the establishment of peace". Needless to say, there could be, and perhaps even should be, differences of opinion in how to deal with the menace of terrorism. Indeed, every war cabinet has such differences in advice and strategy, but this does not necessarily translate into acrimony, as is being speculated. And it should also be stressed that, ultimately, it is the civilian government's decision on which path to take. They are the ones with the national mandate and that mandate should be respected regardless of whether institutions agree with the strategy or not. That the army chief has effectively accepted this is extremely welcome that too in front of the top civilian and military leadership, and indeed the people of Pakistan. That said, if this path hits roadblocks, then there needs to be a 'Plan B,' which brings us to what the army chief said immediately after his support for "any endeavour for peace." He said that while "it is the army's desire that all elements working against the state unconditionally accept the Constitution and the law in their entirety and come back into the national mainstream... there should be no room for doubt about dealing with traitors of the state. Pakistan's public and armed forces possess the ability to send such elements to their logical end".

Lateef Johar, a BSO-Azad member, has been on hunger strike since April 22 outside the Karachi Press Club, and his condition is fast deteriorating.

Compatriots not patriots, Afiya Shehrbano, The News, May 8<sup>57</sup>

Why does Imran Khan cringe from being purely provincial and continue to greedily harbour ambitions for centralised power and federal leverage? In many ways, Imran Khan is the epitome of Pakhtuns unresolved identity crisis which prevents us from imbibing the democratic understanding that governance at local, devolved levels is the most effective way to bring national change. Everything else is hype, grandeur and lust for power, not desire to govern or realise citizenry. Counter to those critics who observe from outside of the province and insist that KP is 'a mess' today, visits and discussions with a variety of official and non-governmental actors have yielded different sociological findings. Whether one agrees with their policies or not, the PTI government is perhaps today, the most active and energetic in its commitment to execute policy in the province. Just three departments in KP (education, health and local government) are fairly successful examples of that elusive partnership that we traditionally moan about – between the bureaucrat and the political representative. The benefit of appointing competent and efficient officials for these critical offices in KP seems to be trickling down to district levels. This, despite a spanner called Fazalur Rehman.

Foreign policy resolutions, Dawn, May 8<sup>58</sup>

The PM views on foreign policy as spelled out on 6 at a conference of Pakistani diplomats in the Middle East and the Gulf deserve to be noted because of what seems to be a welcome change of emphasis in Islamabad's foreign policy priorities. His belief in "economic diplomacy", said Nawaz Sharif, stemmed from the fact that "foreign policy has virtually become economic policy". For that reason, he said, his government's foreign policy was driven by economic considerations and focused on opportunities available to Pakistan. He thus wanted the country to cash in on its relations with the Middle East and the Gulf, because of the region's "booming energy sector, developing infrastructure, thriving services sector and ... connectivity". Speaking ahead of his visit to Iran, Mr Sharif touched upon two issues which have aroused considerable misgivings in opposition circles. One, Pakistan's 'special relationship' with Saudi Arabia and Bahrain would not be at the expense of its ties with Iran; two, there was no change in Pakistan's Syria policy, because Islamabad believed in non-interference in other countries' internal affairs. There is no reason why the principles Mr Sharif outlined should remain confined to the Middle East and Gulf region, especially when he talks of "rebalancing" foreign policy with a view to greater integration with the world.

Sheikhul Islam Allama Tahirul Qadri is not an ordinary mortal; he is a mystic, scholar of international renown and leading politician of the country, all combined in one mercurial person, hard to grasp and impossible to define. If you go by his word, you are bound to revere him as a living saint who was taught for 15 years by Imam Abu Hanifa, founder of the Sunni Hanafi school of fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence) who lived in the 8th century, in the world of spirits. Imran Khan, Tahirul Qadri & a dharna, Raza Rumi, Express Tribune, May 11<sup>60</sup>

[...] Two protests come in the wake of recent tensions between the civilians and the military. Given Pakistan's history, the PTI's protest and the return of Dr Qadri from the safe environs of Canada are termed being 'sponsored'. It is difficult to ascertain the veracity of this perception. However, the timing of these protests against the credibility of a parliament — of which the PTI and its leader, Imran Khan, are part of — is somewhat problematic. This time the responsibility of rigging is being termed a collusive project of the ruling PML-N, the judiciary and the largest television network, ie, Geo Tv. [...] Making matters more complicated, there is little or no interest by the PTI, as the second largest political party, to scrutinise the performance of the PML-N's one year in office. Imran Khan and his party are also not offering any idea of how well they have performed in K-P compared to, say, the PML-N or the PPP. [...] Hypothetically, the success of Dr Qadri's mission would be the end of the current system of parliamentary democracy. Is that what Imran Khan wants? Definitely not. So this may be a calculated risk to augment pressure on the Nawaz government and in the process, endear the segments within the establishment that are annoyed with the government. As a short-term strategy it may work, but it is ultimately going to interrupt or even reverse the democratic transition that commenced in February 2008. Unlike Dr Qadri who has no real systemic stakes, the PTI must chart its course with caution.

A craven approach, Asif Ezdi, The News, May 12<sup>61</sup>

The army chief's speech on Martyrs Day about two weeks ago was addressed not only to the soldiers but indirectly also to the civilian government. It has been widely commented upon in the context of recent tensions in civil-military relations arising from the government's handling of Musharraf's treason trial. What our commentators have largely missed, however, is that the speech also indicates differences, if not strains, between the Nawaz government and the military leadership over Kashmir, and in particular over the Nawaz government's deviation from the country's long-standing policy on this issue. In his speech, Raheel restated that policy. To emphasise the central importance of Kashmir in Pakistan's national priorities, he used Quaid-e-Azam's words ("jugular vein") to describe Kashmir, as an indirect way of signalling to the government that it must remain the core issue in any dialogue with India.

Nawaz Sharif's visit to Iran, Javid Hussain, The Nation, May 13<sup>62</sup>

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif's recent visit to Tehran has played an important role in building up bridges of trust and understanding between Pakistan and Iran. What is required now is active follow-up action to raise an edifice of close cooperation at bilateral and regional levels on the foundation laid down by the visit.

For a new democracy, Dr Atta-ur-Rahman, The News, May 17<sup>63</sup>

During the last 60 years we have seen successive democracies inter-mingled with military rules. It is a painful reality that the worst military rule in Pakistan was far better than the best democracy. A comparison shows that the GDP growth rates were invariably higher during military regimes. Take for instance the recent past. The period between 2001 and 2008 saw an average GDP growth of between 6-8 percent under former president Musharraf. In the subsequent six-period it has hovered around three percent and the present government is struggling to have it reach even the lowly figure of four percent. Why has democracy consistently failed to deliver here, although it has worked reasonably well in India and Bangladesh?

The changing ME political landscape and Pakistan, Atif Hussain, Daily Times, May 18<sup>64</sup>

[...] it makes perfect sense for Pakistan to safeguard its own interests by balancing its relations with Saudi Arabia and Iran. Improving its historically not-so-cordial relations with Iran in the post-revolution era is important for Pakistan for a multitude of other reasons too. The energy-starved country needs gas and would have to complete the pipeline from Iran to get it. Moreover, with hostile governments likely in New Dehli and Kabul, it cannot afford to have a third inimical neighbour. However, Pakistan will have to take extreme care not to cross the red line in its relations with Iran whereby it may earn the wrath of its long time benefactor, Saudi Arabia. Hence, the best option available for Pakistan is to play a role in defusing tension between the two archrivals and to help them reach a compromise. This is not only in the interests of Pakistan but also of Iran, Saudi Arabia and the region as a whole.

A lesson learnt, Syed Kamran Hashmi, Daily Times, May 23<sup>65</sup>

society, growing wrath of the military and, on top of all that, blasphemy charges. How else can one define trouble in Pakistan? Once considered the most powerful person in the country, a man who could ostensibly challenge the authority of the prime minister, the patriotism of the military and legality of the superior judiciary all at once, has not been able to find a way out since the crisis began, as if he has fallen into a ditch, the bottom of which has turned into a quagmire from where no matter how he wants to pull himself up either through attack ads, back door diplomacy or public apology he is pushed further down into the dark. Trying to understand the gravity of the condition, we can at least say that for Mr Rehman, the situation is precarious and it continues to get worse. For his television channels, it is a battle for survival but the real tragedy is with the employees who, except for some renowned editors and anchorpersons, are facing both challenges at the same time, i.e. losing their livelihood and/or their lives. Nonetheless, the only person to be blamed for their predicament, in my opinion, is no other than Mr Rehman himself.

FM Mohammad Ishaq Dar on May 4 expressed the hope the national economy would grow by over 4 per cent during the current fiscal year (2013-14). Inflation would remain in a single digit spurred by growth in both agricultural and industrial sectors, Dar said while addressing the First Business Session at 47th annual meeting of ADB Board of Governors in Astana, Kazakstan. Dar said the fiscal deficit had been restrained to around 6 per cent through an increase in revenues and reduction in expenditures along with positive growth in exports and remittances.

Govt earns 2.3pc instead of 17pc from Sales Tax, The News, May 6<sup>67</sup>

Major portion of the revenue collected from Sales Tax is pocketed by the corrupt mafia instead of going to national exchequer because of massive corruption in the FBR and complex collection system. A report compiled by the Sales Tax wing of the FBR disclosed that total domestic and export value recorded of all products amounted to Rs20 billion. However after the release of refund and input and output the total earning of the government was 3.2 percent instead of 16 or 17%. It means that tax collection was less than half contrary to burden of 16%. It may be recalled that the rate of Sales Tax last year was 16%.

The government on Friday confirmed to have added about $15.3 billion to the country's external debt, violating prudent borrowing limits under the FRDLA and promised to reduce public debt significantly by 2015-16. This is part of MTDS 2013-14 to 2017-18 released here on 9 after conclusion of third review of the IMF programme in Dubai. "The public debt to GDP ratio is projected to be brought down to 55.2pc by 2015-16," said the ministry of finance. It said the debt ratio was expected to be around 52pc by end 2017-18 which would be well below the threshold of 60pc as mentioned in the FRDLA.

After missing the economic growth target in its first year because of a poor show by agriculture and services sectors, the PML-N government has set an ambitious target to expand the economy at a rate of 7.2 per cent by the financial year of 2016-17. A meeting of the cabinet, presided over by PM Nawaz Sharif on May 15, cleared the "Budget Strategy Paper 2014-17", envisaging fiscal deficit at 4.8pc for the next financial year, rate of inflation at 7.5pc, federal development programme at Rs525 billion and tax revenue at Rs2.810 trillion. The meeting was informed that the federal budget was being planned for presentation in the National Assembly on June 3.

FM Senator Ishaq Dar on Tuesday said that government would announce the annual budget 2014-15 on June 3 in National Assembly with total outlay of Rs 3,973 billion and budget deficit of 4.8 percent of the GDP for next fiscal year. He briefed the joint session of the National Assembly and Senate Standing Committees on Finance Revenue and Economic on the upcoming budget 2014-15. The committee proceedings were declared in-camera on the request of Finance Minister. Sources informed The Nation that Ishaq Dar has spent most of the time on giving briefing on current economic situation of the country instead of budget proposal. He recalled the economic achievement of the government during first year of its tenure including elimination of circular debt, IMF programme, auction of 3G/4G, auction of Eurobonds and others.

Fiscal woes: 'K-P faces Rs22b hole in budget', Express Tribune, May 22<sup>73</sup>

K-P is facing a shortage of Rs22 billion in its current budget because of the disbursements of less-than-promised funds by the centre, said K-P Minister for Finance SirajulHaq on May 21. Addressing a news conference at the Civil Secretariat after attending the biannual meeting of the NFC award in Islamabad on Tuesday, Haq said under the 7th NFC award, K-P's share of the total federal divisible pool was 8.97%. Sold short? "For the fiscal year 2013-2014, the Ministry of Finance calculated the total volume of the divisible pool as Rs 2,475 billion initially. K-P was to get around Rs222 billion of this and provincial budget estimates were also based on this figure," said Haq.

Build-up in foreign debt, Dawn, May 26<sup>74</sup>

[...] The external debt servicing totalled $5.388 billion in nine months of this fiscal year. Sources in the ministry of finance say by the end of the year in June, total external debt servicing may reach $7 billion, of which nearly $6 billion would fall in the government's account. The government is borrowing to repay external debts. An increase of 4.2pc and 11.4pc respectively in exports and remittances in 10 months of FY14 has somewhat improved the situation.

External account trends, Dawn, May 26<sup>75</sup>

of the last fiscal, mainly due to lower Coalition Support Fund receipts. The capital account dipped by 96pc in April due to the absence of the grant received from Saudi Arabia ($750m each) in February and March. The key highlight in April's external numbers was the launch of the Eurobonds, which fetched $2bn. While the key head of petroleum imports dipped by 10pc MoM, other heads such as food and transport imports rose by double digits to keep the overall imports largely flat. The services deficit also dipped by 19pc due to the rise in export services. Remittances receded by 2pc during April, and are expected to remain flat in May. Thus, April's current account deficit remained similar in quantum compared to the previous month.

EDITORIALS AND OPINIONS

Lights out, Express Tribune, May 1<sup>106</sup>

Non-payment is a key reason behind the phenomenon of circular debt, which needs no explaining here. Ironically, among these defaulters are the highest of state offices, both civilian and military, which provides a precedent for others to follow suit. By starting with itself, and cutting off installations such as the Parliament House and the Prime Minister's Secretariat, the government is essentially trying to send a signal to the public both the common man and elite: no one will be spared from paying its dues. Anti-default drives are inherently an exercise in public display and require a lot of noise and publicity for them to be successful. It is not without coincidence that one of the most brash parliamentarians of the ruling PML-N is spearheading this drive.

World Bank Delivers, The Nation, May 4<sup>107</sup>

The government is congratulating itself for securing a $1billion loan from the World Bank, which will be given to Pakistan in the next week or so, in addition to another $11 billion to be handed over the course of the next five years for developmental projects. Experts are calling this 'cheap money' considering the repayment of this money will be spread out over 25 years starting in 2019, with a very nominal interest rate of 2.5%. Ishaq Dar was quick to point out potential advantages of this loan, such as the rise in the country's foreign exchange or using it to reduce the country's domestic debt which stands at Rs 100 billion at an interest of 12.5% per annum.

Bond market delusions, Sakib Sherani, Dawn, May<sup>108</sup>

[...] Mindset of celebrating each new round of international borrowing is not new, of course. It goes back to Pakistan's early days, and was last on full display at the height of Gen Musharraf's failed economic policies. That it is alive and kicking almost 10 years later — and that too under those who roundly criticised the Musharraf-Shaukat Aziz economic 'model' — shows how deep-rooted and durable our misconceptions and delusions are. The country's recent foray into the international sovereign bond market is instructive. Pakistan raised $2bn via two Eurobonds of five and 10 years' maturity. The bond issue was oversubscribed 14 times, leading the finance minister to issue a series of self-congratulatory statements. While doing so, unfortunately, he had no qualms about using a narrative he had rightly described, while in opposition a few short years ago, as false as well as misleading.

The GEO- ISI showdown, Farooq Hameed Khan, The Nation, May 2<sup>109</sup>

[...] GEO erred by projecting the views and allegations of Hamid Mir's family with respect to the ISI, as the official viewpoint of the media group. To make matters worse, some stalwarts called for the DG ISI's resignation. The question to ask is: who benefitted from the assassination attempt on Hamid Mir? Surely not the army or the ISI, but that 'third force' comprising hostile external agencies and in-country rogue political/ media elements constantly looking for opportunities to target and weaken Pakistan's elite security institutions. They are aware that Pakistan's army and ISI stand firmly as the country's centre of gravity and are the guardians of its strategic weapons program. Luckily, Hamid Mir survived, but this third force succeeded in its design to make the ISI look controversial. Hence it was not surprising that within minutes of the onslaught against the ISI, the Indian media jubilantly launched its venomous anti army/ISI propaganda with full force. Western media, too, used the opportunity to bash Pakistan's premier intelligence agency. The army and ISI have remained prime targets of a well-orchestrated campaign since the return of democracy in 2008. This can be linked to a few controversial clauses in the Kerry Lugar Bill that aimed indirectly at curtailing the powers of the army/ ISI, the failed October 2008 notification by the last PPP government to place the ISI under the Interior Ministry, the PPP's draft bill to defang the ISI that backfired, and former Ambassador Hussain Haqqani's unsuccessful memorandum conspiracy against the army/ ISI.

The third review, Dr Ashfaque H Khan, The News, May 13<sup>110</sup>

The IMF mission and the Pakistani authorities have successfully completed the third review of the ongoing IMF programme without any major hiccups. The programme was found to be broadly on track. However, some concerns and disappointments were expressed from both sides on the rising inflation and the performance of the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) in terms of revenue collection. [...] What is interesting to note here is that it took almost eleven months for the IMF and the government to realise that the revenue target for the FBR was grossly unrealistic. When I could predict that the FBR would not collect more than Rs2250 billion in January this year, why did it take IMF experts to revise downward the revenue target to Rs2270 billion at the fag end of the fiscal year? The government is not in a position now to take any additional measures to achieve the revised target of Rs2345 billion. Is this what we call professionalism in the IMF?

The economy, Dr Farrukh Saleem, The News, May 25<sup>111</sup>

Ishaq Dar's efforts to stabilise the economy are beginning to bear fruit. Our liquid foreign exchange reserves have gone up from $7.9 billion in January to $13.3 billion as of May 2014. Business sentiments within our private sector has been gaining momentum and private sector debt, as a consequence, has gone up from Rs141 billion last year to Rs320 billion (first 10-month comparison). The rate of inflation, at a four-month high, remains stubborn but seems capped in the single digit. There is some really good news on the budgetary front where Ishaq Dar seems all set to cut the deficit by a wholesome 25 percent or a cut of around Rs400 billion in just one year. The conclusion being that the current economic trajectory is likely to take us into a phase of macroeconomic stability.

Security agencies have started surveillance of the Indus River on the basis of an intelligence report that outlawed militant groups were planning to use the waterway for transporting arms and ammunition and kidnapped persons between KP and the provinces of Punjab and Sindh. Officials in intelligence agencies, interior ministry and the capital police said that the outlawed Al Qaeda and TTP had chosen the waterway in order to skip security checking on motorways, national highways and other land routes. There are only three points where militants can be intercepted on the River Indus - Sukkur Barrage, Gudu Barrage and Kotri Barrage in Sindh, the officials said. Apart from that, there are no security pickets on the river right from KP to the Sukkur Barrage. Even at the three barrages, the security measures are aimed at protecting the water reservoirs - not countering the movement of militants.

Fearing a backlash from the outlawed TTP in the government seat of Islamabad, an apprehensive PML-N government has decided to use both the security forces and the police on high alert to maintain peace in the capital as well as other parts of the country. It appears as if the government has decided to put the option of talks on hold and focus on a military operation in the militant-infested NW. Operation of sorts had been started with air strikes on the militant hideouts on 21.

The Taliban on May 1 alleged the government of pursuing a dual policy, saying on one side it was harping on the beat of peace talks while on the other it was issuing threats to militants. TTP spokesman Shahidullah Shahid in a media statement also alleged that the army has been conducting operation in Babar and Shaktoi areas of South Waziristan Agency for last two days, warning that talks and war cannot go together. Shahid said that operations were being intensified against the TTP across the country. He went on to say that Taliban are willing to talk in the interest of Islam and the Muslims of Pakistan, but would not accept the dialogue to be used a political tool and to pursue war tactics. "Taliban are fighting for the supremacy of sharia and our Mujahideen have the capability to face any difficult situation and they know how to give a befitting response to the enemy," the spokesman said. Sajna planning to overthrow Fazlullah, The Nation, May 3<sup>141</sup>

Against the backdrop of infighting among the outlawed TTP ranks, some of its militant leaders are planning to kill Maulvi Fazlullah – the disputed chief of Pakistani Taliban who is hiding in Afghanistan, The Nation has learnt. Tribesmen close to TTP commander Khan Said Mehsud alias Sajna talking to this correspondent from an undisclosed location in a tribal area informed on 2 that Sajna is making bids to unite all the anti-Fazalullah militants in TTP under his command, apparently to dethrone the disputed Fazlullah. Sajna was tipped as the strongest contender for assuming Taliban leadership after Hakimullah Mehsud's killing in a US drone strike, claiming himself as being the most suitable candidate to run the militant organisation comprising as many as 43 different militant outfits. About the possibility of Sajna's forming a new militant outfit, the tribesmen remarked, Khan Said alias Sajna has the potential to form a new amalgam of militant groups, however to establish his command he has either to get oath of allegiance from majority of TTP commanders or eliminate them, while Fazalullah will be his prime target. Sajna, who is believed to be the strong supporter of peace with the government during the time of Hakimullah Mehsud, is fighting a fierce battle with Shehryar Mehsud in South Waziristan. Shehryar was close to Hakimullah, who believed that war was the only way to fulfil Pakistani Taliban's agenda.

Professor Ibrahim, member of Taliban negotiation committee, has said Taliban should not become impediment on the way to permanent peace in Pakistan. "If the government demands for permanent peace in the country during direct talks with Taliban, I will side with government. I will persuade the Taliban Shoora to enter into a treaty on permanent peace with government," he said this while talking to a private TV channel. He went on to say that no venue for holding second round of direct talks between the government and Taliban Shoora could be decided. 'I am continuing consultations with government committee and Taliban Shoora in this respect,' he added. It is hoped that they would soon agree on the venue for peace talks and the members of both the committees will head towards the set venue within three to four days, he said. He was of the view that interior minister meeting with the PM Nawaz Sharif is their internal matter. "We will continue to strive for making the negotiations a success. Ceasefire between the both sides is our top priority," he said.

Infighting between rival TTP factions leaves 13 dead, Dawn, May 7<sup>144</sup>

Thirteen militants have been killed on May 6 as infighting between rival Taliban groups restarted in Shawal Tehsil of North Waziristan Agency. The latest violence comes a few days after a ceasefire which the militants claimed to have reached through mediation by top commanders. Official and tribal sources confirmed that the clashes had started early Tuesday morning between SheryarMehsud and Khan Said alias Sajna.

Pakistan Taliban chief makes last-ditch bid to assert authority, The Nation, May 11<sup>145</sup>

The head of the Pakistani Taliban is making a last-ditch bid to stamp his authority on the increasingly divided insurgency by ordering a top commander sacked, Taliban sources said. Taliban head Maulana Fazlullah moved against Khan "Sajna" Said on May 9 after weeks of bloody infighting in the powerful Mehsud tribe that supplies the bulk of the Pakistani Taliban fighters, they said. Scores of men have been killed. The risk for Fazlullah is that Said might ignore him and battle on. Said is trying to wrest control of the Mehsud tribe - with its many weapons and lucrative smuggling routes and extortion business - from rival ShehryarMehsud. "It's a test case for Maulana Fazlullah and his shura," a Taliban commander said, referring to the movement's leadership council. "It will determine their future. If Sajna is convinced and he stops fighting, it conveys a good message to rest of the Taliban factions," he said. "Otherwise it will be a setback for Fazlullah if Sajna refuses to obey his command."

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Indian arms for Kabul, Dawn, May 2<sup>156</sup>

[...] In this unfriendly regional setting, the reported arms agreement between India and Russia is being viewed with misgivings. Initially, reports said, New Delhi would 'source' Russia for the supply of smaller weapons such as light artillery, but eventually this flow of arms paid for by India would include heavy artillery, tanks and helicopters. From India's point of view, such a deal would consolidate the influence New Delhi has already built up in post-Taliban Afghanistan. But in regional terms, it will not help the cause of peace especially with Islamabad looking upon it as a ploy to weaken its own influence over Kabul. While Islamabad's differences with Kabul remain, the fact that Pakistan is key to the reconciliation process cannot be wished away, and other countries would do well to realise this point. Hence it would be disastrous if regional states and outside powers were to adopt policies that could once again make Afghanistan an arena for proxy wars.

The sectarian divide, Muhammad Amir Rana, Dawn, May 4<sup>157</sup>

[...] An important factor contributing to growing sectarian divide and violence is the rise and empowerment of sectarian groups. These groups are not only changing socio-cultural patterns but have also transformed the traditionally nationalistic, anti-Indian discourse into a sectarian one. Sectarian discrimination in daily life is increasing and sectarian-based ghettos are growing in Pakistan. Different sects and sectarian groups are encouraging the establishment of separate housing societies and localities. Sectarian violence has manifested itself in three major forms in Pakistan: sectarian-related terrorism; community and tribal sectarian violence; and irregular or instant sectarian violence. Sectarian-related terrorism is a form of organised and structured violence in Pakistan; the other two strands represent a non-structured pattern of sectarian violence mainly arising from hate speech, growing sectarian intolerance and efforts to secure sectarian interests at the community, tribal or group level. All three forms complement each other, and if one type is triggered by an incident, the other two may be activated. If triggered, the second pattern of sectarian violence has a long-term impact and can activate the other two forms of violence. For instance, tribal sectarian tensions in Kurram Agency took four years to come down. The third form is a new phenomenon. When an incident of a sectarian nature occurs, it can trigger attacks on mosques, shrines and religious symbols of rival sects. This happened in Rawalpindi last year when sectarian clashes in the city during a Muharram procession triggered sectarian tensions and violence across the country.

War and peace, Express Tribune, May 9<sup>158</sup>

Since March this year, when government negotiators and the Taliban shura met, the talks have gone nowhere. While Taliban prisoners have been released, it is unclear if any concessions at all have been extracted from the Taliban. Certainly there have been no visible ones, with abducted persons, including the sons of Salman Taseer and ex-prime minister Yousaf Raza Gilani, still held by militants and attacks continuing on troops. General Sharif has made it clear this will not be tolerated and that there will be retaliation. This is expected to come in the form of massive air strikes and possible action on the ground in North Waziristan. Whether this will scupper peace talks once and for all is yet to be seen, but it seems likely this may happen. With Mian Nawaz Sharif accepting the army stance, it is important his government consider how to proceed next. The army and the government need to work together. Perhaps the focus on defeating militants should combine armed action with development activity carried out by civilian authorities, as a means to push back militancy and give people in conflict zones something else to look towards, so that a bigger front against the militant threat can be built. This eventually may be the only way to demolish it and save people from the calamity they currently face.

Exploring extremism, Muhammad Amir Rana, Dawn, May 18<sup>159</sup>

[...] Thinking patterns in Pakistan are transforming due to the influence of changing socio-cultural, religious-ideological and politico-economic dynamics here and around the world. But in recent years, Pakistani expats in the West have emerged as one of the important factors shaping the outlook of the upper classes in the country. Western societies are concerned about the religiosity of the Muslim Diasporas, which is perceived to be rising. There are also identity-related issues. Though the pattern of social transformation is not the same across the West, the latter's political and intellectual establishments see the potential rise of parallel societies. The Western security establishment feels the ultimate outcome will be violent extremism in their lands. In response, Muslim Diasporas are struggling to make their social, religious and cultural values compatible with Western living. The biggest challenge is to find a rational basis for their religious norms and values. The Salafi movement and clergy are out there to help them.

Afghan transition, Khadim Hussain, Dawn, May 27<sup>160</sup>

Political transitions both to the east and west of Pakistan are important politically, strategically and economically. While India now has a new government led by the BJP, Afghanistan should have a new president by the end of June. Though Pakistan needs to understand developments in both its eastern and western neighbours, it has to give special attention to Afghanistan keeping in view the emerging conditions there. Afghanistan is passing through a tremendous transition in the political, strategic and economic spheres. It seems the country will see the first-ever peaceful transition from one elected president to another in its history. This transition and the drawdown of Isaf forces will have two major implications for Pakistan and Afghanistan. The first pertains to the internal security of both countries. A stable and sovereign Afghanistan would mean that safe havens would be denied to foreign militants inside that country. [...]The second and most important implication of the transition in Afghanistan pertains to the economy. A Joint Economic Commission session was held between Pakistan and Afghanistan in February this year. The JEC had pledged to “double their bilateral trade volume from $2.5 billion to $5bn and initiate economic projects of mutual interest”, Daily Outlook Afghanistan had reported.

RELATIONS WITH INDIA

Deal between India and Russia likely to upset Pakistan, The Nation, May, 1<sup>161</sup>

India has signed an agreement under which it will pay Russia to supply arms and equipment to the Afghan military as foreign combat troops prepare to leave the country, in a move that risks infuriating Pakistan. Under the deal, smaller arms such as light artillery and mortars will be sourced from Russia and moved to Afghanistan. But it could eventually involve the transfer of heavy artillery, tanks and even combat helicopters that the Afghans have been asking India for since last year. India has already been training military officers from Afghanistan, hosted a 60-member Special Forces group last year in the deserts of Rajasthan and supplied equipment such as combat vehicles and field medical support facilities.

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Modi victory a wakeup call for Pakistan, Ayaz Amir, The News, May 20<sup>174</sup>

For the first thing this victory will do is to draw an unfortunate contrast between India and Pakistan. We may not like Narendra Modi the instigator or abettor of the anti-Muslim riots in Godhra. But it is hard to deny that coming from where he does he will make a strong prime minister. His campaign was sharply focused and as prime minister, as all the signs suggest, he is likely to be clear about his goals and where he wants to take his country. He will be master in his own house. Compare this with conditions in Pakistan. Nawaz Sharif fancies himself a strongman but as the nation has had plenty of opportunity to observe, he is anything but that: confusion and lack of aim the hallmarks of his stewardship – qualities springing to the fore in the last one month in his dealings with the army and his government's handling of the aftermath of the Geo affair.

Modi sarkar, Yaqoob Khan Bangash, Express Tribune, May 19<sup>175</sup>

[...] Modi's win is not a validation of the Two-Nation Theory, just as the Congress governments in the past were not a negation of it. The coming to power of a party known for Hindu nationalism does not mean that Muslims and other minorities will be summarily slaughtered. [...]The Muslims and other minorities who voted for the BJP did not vote for self-destruction, but made intelligent political decisions. [...]Modi's win was primarily a vote for development. [...] Modi's win might serve as a wake-up call for Indian Muslims. While there remains discrimination against Muslims in India, there are critical issues within the community such as resistance to broader social interaction, inward looking lives, etc, which stymie their progress.

Engaging Modi, Munir Akram, Dawn, May 25<sup>176</sup>

The invitation to Nawaz Sharif and other Saarc leaders from Prime Minister-elect Narendra Modi to attend his inauguration was even more surprising than his landslide electoral victory. To put it mildly, Modi has not always been so engaging. [...]Modi's invitation is an astute diplomatic move and a mixed blessing for the Pakistan prime minister. Its rejection could have been construed as an unfriendly gesture and justification for future Indian belligerence. However, its acceptance, despite past and recent insults hurled at Pakistan, could cast this country in the role of an Indian satrap, more so if other South Asian leaders attend. The occasion could be utilised by Modi to set the bilateral and regional agenda. In any case, peace is not about to break out between Pakistan and India. While Modi and the BJP have made tactical adjustments to their ideology, their Hindu hard line remains clearly visible. BJP's electoral manifesto repeats known objectives — such as building the Ram temple on the site of the destroyed Babri mosque and abrogating Article 370 of the constitution — and some unknown ones — such as “reviewing and updating” India's nuclear doctrine.

Never was a visit more timely, more needed, Rustam Shah Mohmand, Express Tribune, May 27<sup>177</sup>

There was no reason to decline an invitation to attend the oath-taking ceremony of Mr Narendra Modi. Firstly, all Saarc leaders were invited to attend the inauguration of the new Indian prime minister. By opting out, Pakistan would have singled itself out as a country that is not sincerely endeavouring to seek peace and pursue détente with the biggest South Asian country. Secondly, a refusal to participate in the inauguration would have led to more pronounced tensions and would have promoted more hostility, more suspicions. It would have been preposterous to help lay the foundations of a more belligerent policy towards Pakistan's most important neighbour.

India's Defence budget, Dr Farrukh Saleem, The News, May 18<sup>178</sup>

In 1988, India's defence budget stood at Rs168 billion. Last year's allocation stands at a colossal Rs2.03 trillion – an increase of nearly 14 times. In dollar terms, the defence budget has gone up from $16.7 billion to $47.7 billion (in constant 2010). [...] The Indian army's tank inventory stands at 3,978 – Arjun MBT, T-90s and T-72s. Last year, India placed an order of 235 T-90s for a billion dollars. India wants to buy Rafale fighter jets worth $20 billion. India has bought $39 billion worth of killing machines from Russia. India is buying American C-130Js for $5 billion, Apache attack helicopter for $1.4 billion, ultra-light howitzers for $885 million and Chinook heavy-lift helicopters for $1 billion. Why is India accumulating tanks? [...] The Indian army's Arjun main battle tanks are not for Bangladesh. The T-72, 2nd generation, 41.5 tons, main battle tanks are neither for China nor for Nepal. The T-90, 3rd generation, 47.5 ton, main battle tanks are neither for Bhutan nor for Burma. The on-the-ground reality is that most Indian arms are positioned to target Pakistan. On the ground, Bharatiya Sthalsena has a total of 13 corps of which 6 are strike corps. Of the 13 corps at least 7 have their guns pointed at Pakistan (Sundarji Doctrine). The 3rd Armored Division, 2nd Armored Brigade, 4 RAPID, Jaisalmer AFS, Utarlai AFS and Bhuj AFS are all positioned to split Pakistan into two (by capturing the Kashmore/Guddu Barrage-Reti-Rahimyar Khan triangle). Since 2004, India has been spending billions on its Pakistan-specific, cold-start, offensive military doctrine-speed, overwhelming firepower and mobilisation time of 48 hours.
