The situation in Gilgit Baltistan is relatively normal after a prolonged period of sectarian unrest and instability. Few mosques in the area which were closed in the aftermath of the sectarian violence have been re-opened and this came across as a welcome sign. The Gilgit Baltistan Legislative Assembly (GBLA) passed a resolution to this effect after which these mosques were re-opened by representatives of the other sects as part of the goodwill gesture, to restore normalcy in the violence-struck region. A Judicial commission has been appointed after months on violence to probe into the outbreak of sectarian violence in the region.

Meanwhile, the controversial Diamer Bhasha dam in Gilgit Baltistan was recently embroiled in yet another controversy- it is alleged that some turbines of the dam were deliberately placed in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa which would entitle the latter to a large share in the royalty. As the report included in the current issue indicates, the Water and Power Development Authority (WAPDA) and the federal government of Pakistan were both urged to look into the matter and resolve it.

The jail authorities in Gilgit jail were accused of torturing inmates. The Human Rights Commission of Pakistan (HRCP) took serious note of the alleged atrocities committed by jail authorities. Some prominent activists have been imprisoned in Gilgit Baltistan including Baba Jan Hunzai and there is growing popular demand all across to secure his early release along with others.

GB Code of Conduct, Government in gridlock

Dardistan Times, May 27, 2012

The government of Gilgit-Baltistan presented the Code of Conduct in the Legislative Assembly where the members raised a number of objections during a heated debate. Later, the speaker referred it to a select committee of the house for further deliberation and vetting. Whatever is its future, it has now become very clear that the government has put itself in a blind alley as far as the Code of Conduct and maintenance of peace and sectarian harmony in the region are concerned. The government's headache had almost come to an end after head of the Shia community Agha Rahat signed the code but as the chief of the rival community Qazi Nisar raised objections and demanded modifications in the documents.

The speakers zeroed in on the lack of opportunities for the people of G-B in education, especially resulting from sectarian strife in the recent past. They identified radio as the most effective tool of communication to spread education in the region, where people don't have easy access to newspapers.

The Express Tribune, May 26, 2012

GILGIT: A legislator of Gilgit-Baltistan Legislative Assembly (GBLA) has asked the government to verify reports of a few turbines of Diamer-Bhasha Dam being purposefully fixed in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (K-P) territory. "This is a cause of concern for Gilgit-Baltistan (G-B)," stated Didar Ali, an independent lawmaker, who alleged that it is an attempt by K-P government to get a share of the dam's royalty. He stated that if the reports are true, the federal government and the Water and Power Development Authority (Wapda) should undo the act immediately. Ties between the K-P and G-B were strained after the former passed a resolution claiming rights of over 8km land near the Diamer-Bhasha Dam. According to experts, if the claim is accepted, K-P will be entitled to 50 per cent of the dam's royalty.

Sectarian murders

The Express Tribune, May 14, 2012

KARACHI: The crash of a passenger plane is a great human loss and we should all mourn this event. However, there is one thing that bothers me. The amount of media coverage that a plane crash gets is far greater than say incidents of sectarian violence. Take for instance, the shooting deaths of bus passengers all Shias in Mastung, Balochistan and on the Karakoram Highway in Gilgit-Baltistan. Would it be too much to ask the media, especially our television channels, to also give this issue the coverage that it deserves?

Syed Fazl-e-Haider, Sectarian strife in Pakistan hurts its ties with China

The National, May 11, 2012

Last month, riots between Sunni and Shia groups in north-east Pakistan claimed at least 20 lives and left 50 others injured, prompting the government to deploy troops and to impose a curfew in the volatile areas. That curfew has since been lifted in the area, which borders western China. But growing sectarian discord in Gilgit-Baltistan and Skardu districts, where the riots occurred, is likely to turn the region into a sectarian flashpoint, frustrating Chinese plans for development of its western region.

The strategically located area of Gilgit-Baltistan - which connects Pakistan to China's western province of Xinjiang - borders Afghanistan, China, India and the strife-torn Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province of Pakistan. The region is seen by both India and Pakistan as part of the larger Jammu and Kashmir issue, which has been one of the most intractable points of contention between the two South Asian rivals since partition.

Masood Hussain, Oldest records on Buddhism need more attention

Economic Times, May 8, 2012

Eight decades after cattle grazers discovered them in undivided India's Gilgit, the famous Buddhist manuscripts are still awaiting proper preservation in Srinagar's SPS Museum. Locked in a fireproof vault, mostly laminated, these scripts are neither displayed nor can they be photographed.

"These are fragile assets and unless we have a proper preservation system, we do not permit people to touch them," museum curator Mushtaq Ahmad stated. "We will launch a formal programme in our own laboratory once we shift to the new museum building." A brand new museum, built for 30 crore, is ready for housewarming.

Gilgit manuscripts date back to the sixth century and are known to be one of the oldest records on Buddhism. These predate Rajtarangni, the oldest "history" that Kalhana wrote on Kashmir. Discovered by cattle grazers near an old stupa, these boxes were immediately transferred to Srinagar durbar.

Mehtab Haider, SC tribunal to resolve KPK-GB dispute on Bhasha Dam

The News, May 7, 2012

ISLAMABAD: The government will constitute a high-powered tribunal led by chief justice of Pakistan to resolve the complicated issue of net hydel profit share between Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KP) and Gilgit-Baltistan (G-B) governments on account of construction of Diamer-Bhasha dam.

Without putting in place required mechanism in shape of safety guard measures related to land compensation, environment and resolving net hydel profit share, the multilateral donors consortium led by Asian Development Bank (ADB) will find it difficult to make Basha project as bankable for other donors to manage financing of $12.7 billion for its construction.

A.G. Noorani, Revive LoC trade

Dawn, March 3, 2012

It is a great pity that trade across the Line of Control (LoC) between the two parts of Kashmir, which started in October 2008, continues to suffer under crippling restrictions which could and should have been foreseen. Trade continues to be based on barter in a climate in which progress in trade and communication facilities is the order of the day. The ancient Silk route is being revived. All across Central Asia plans are being made to ensure seamless connectivity by road and the railways. This is apart from plans for oil and gas pipelines across national frontiers, of which there are more than one. In a context such as this, barter trade across the LoC stands out like a sore thumb.
