A. SOUTH ASIA

PAKISTAN

- Marc Grossman to be the new special US envoy to Afghanistan and Pakistan, Senator John Kerry visits Islamabad amid Davis row; Top US lawmakers reject Pakistan aid cuts over Davis issue; Pakistan hopes to reschedule US, Afghan talks

In a significant development, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has chosen Marc Grossman as the new United States' special envoy to Afghanistan and Pakistan. The position fell vacant due to demise of Richard Holbrooke. Grossman, a former US Ambassador to Turkey, retired from the State Department in 2005 after three decades in US diplomatic service.<sup>1</sup>

However, US Senator John Kerry visited Pakistan on a mission to resolve a diplomatic row over an American official Davis who is facing charges of killing two Pakistani citizens. Sources in US embassy in Islamabad noted that Kerry will meet Pakistan government officials to reassure them of long-term US commitment to Pakistan.<sup>2</sup> Meanwhile, reports noted that top US lawmakers rejected talk of cutting aid to Pakistan as leverage to win the release of Davis. Despite the deep and growing frustration in the US Congress over the dispute, lawmakers were keenly aware of the need not to destabilize Pakistan at a time when Washington relies on Islamabad in Afghanistan and elsewhere.<sup>3</sup>

In another development, government of Pakistan expressed hope that postponed talks with the United States and Afghanistan would be rescheduled soon, despite a deepening diplomatic crisis over the ongoing detention of a US official. The US State Department postponed the talks, set for this month, following failed attempts to get Pakistan to release Raymond Davis, who is accused of double murder and has been held in Lahore. The annual talks, in which ministers and other top officials review the war in Afghanistan and the fight against militants, had been rescheduled for February 23-24 in Washington.<sup>4</sup>

Pakistani President Asif Zardari has asked that the deal which Japan is negotiating with India to cooperate in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, should also be extended to Pakistan. He stated, "If Japan is willing to cooperate with India in nuclear technology and (is) giving nuclear technology for peaceful purpose; I do not see any reason why we should not deserve the same." He made these remarks before undertaking a three- day visit to Japan.<sup>21</sup> Meanwhile, Japan and Indonesia have agreed to boost their strategic partnership to secure common interests in the Asian region as the two countries held their first ministerial strategic dialogue in Tokyo.<sup>22</sup>

A Russian foreign ministry spokesperson noted that the much awaited peace treaty between Russia and Japan must not be related only to their territorial dispute. He stated, "A Russia-Japan peace treaty must mark the new level of cooperation with Japan in politics, trade, economy, innovations, technologies and so on." <sup>23</sup> There are also reports that crisis talks between Russia and Japan over four Pacific islands on February 18, ended in acrimonious failure. This happened because Tokyo reaffirmed its claim on the chain and Moscow accused its neighbour of extreme behaviour.<sup>24</sup> It is believed that Moscow is planning to send new air defense systems, possibly including S-400 rockets, to islands at the center of a territorial dispute with Japan.<sup>25</sup>

In other developments, according to newly declassified Japanese diplomatic documents, the United States, in 1969, demanded Japan pay $650 million, worth some 234 billion yen under the exchange rate at that time, to finance unspecified costs related to the 1972 reversion of Okinawa to Japanese sovereignty from US control.<sup>26</sup>

Tajik and Russian border officials are negotiating a new joint agreement on controlling the porous border Tajikistan shares with Afghanistan to renew the expired five-year Tajik-Afghan border protection agreement. Moscow has several times expressed concern about the rise of drug smuggling from Afghanistan across Tajikistan's poorly-protected border that could spread into Central Asia and on to Russia. Russian border officers left Tajikistan in 2005, ending a police presence of more than 100 years. Units of Russia's Federal Security Service have since taken a border advisory role.<sup>39</sup>

The Foreign Minister of Russia Sergey Lavrov paid an official visit to the United Kingdom and called upon to revive their bilateral relationship which has apparently stagnated on account of the controversial fallout of the Litvinenko murder case of 2006. Lavrov is the first senior Russian government official to come to Britain since the death from radiation poisoning of Alexander Litvinenko, a former Russian agent, in London, in November, 2006.<sup>43</sup>

In addition to trade and economic relations, the two sides discussed a wide range of international and regional issues, including the Middle East, Afghanistan, European security and the controversy surrounding Iran's nuclear plans. Special focus was laid on anti-terrorist cooperation and visa free regime between Russia and Europe. Lavrov named six priority areas of cooperation with Britain in his talks with Foreign Secretary William Hague. These include trade and investment, finance, high-tech, energy, business ties, and building up infrastructure for forthcoming Olympic events. The dialogue was termed 'very positive' with both sides agreeing to overcome serious disagreements and move towards a 'steady and patient rapprochement'. It would be worth noting that Russia is one of Britain's main trading partners. Over 1,000 British companies are currently operating in Russia. According to experts' estimates, the two countries' trade exceeds 17 billion US dollars. Moreover, Britain is one of Russia's largest foreign investment partners.<sup>44</sup>

Russian President Medvedev paid a two days visit to Italy. During the visit, he sought support of Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi for cooperation on energy projects and development of a new regional aircraft. Russia plans to develop its ties with Italy in gas and other energy resources, as well as cooperate in nuclear energy. Some of the main documents signed included Gazprom's agreement with Eni to jointly develop an oil field in Northern Africa, an agreement between Vneshekonombank and Italy's Cassa Depositi e Prestiti bank and a document on military transit over Russian territory. The year 2011 was declared as the year of Russian culture in Italy and 2012 vice versa. Italy is one of Russia's biggest business partners, with bilateral trade reaching $36.8 billion last year.<sup>45</sup>

In an apparent sign of Russia and Ukraine being able to resolve their long standing differences over the pricing of natural gas, Ukraine has agreed to pay $280 per 1000 cubic metres of gas starting from April 2011<sup>46</sup>. It would be worth recalling the long standing gas pricing dispute which had led Russia to cut off gas supplies to Ukraine in the year 2009. This also resulted in South Eastern Europe being deprived off their main source of fuel in one of the harshest winter's which Europe had ever experienced.

In order to tackle the problem of rising inflation, Russia's First Deputy Prime Minister Igor Shuvalov has ordered the Agriculture, Finance and Economy ministries to formulate mechanisms to regulate food prices and create a fund to buy and sell food products<sup>47</sup>. The first major initiative could be the plan to regulate the prices of potatoes which have witnessed an upward jump of close to 25%.

Reports noted that Russia's GAZ and Germany's Volkswagen plan to form a joint venture in order to produce 300,000 cars per year in Russia<sup>48</sup>. The joint venture will produce a range of Volkswagen brands including the Jetta, Skoda Octavia and Skoda Yeti models. GAZ would use its plant in Nizhny Novgorod for the joint-venture project, while VW would use its Kaluga facility in Russia.

Meanwhile, Russia's foreign minister Mr. Lavrov has said that it can be "counter-productive" for the United States and the West to encourage the spread of revolutions and pro-democracy protests in the Middle East<sup>49</sup>. However, the former USSR leader Mikhail Gorbachev has asserted that popular revolts in Egypt and Tunisia are a warning that democratic freedoms cannot be traded for a facade of political stability or economic growth. Gorbachev has likened Putin's dominant United Russia party to the Soviet Communist Party and said that the Kremlin's economic modernization drive will not succeed without improvements in democracy and the electoral system. He said that "power without accountability" was unsustainable. In the end the voice of the people will be decisive.<sup>50</sup>

Reports noted that France's oil major company Total and Russia's top oil producer Rosneft are negotiating possible cooperation in projects on the shelves of the Barents and Black Seas<sup>51</sup>. Total is also interested in cooperation on continental shelf projects in Russia. Total (Europe's third largest oil producer) recently teamed with Russian gas monopoly Gazprom to develop the Shtokman natural gas field in the Barents Sea, which holds about 3.9 trillion cubic meters of gas (enough to meet current global demand for more than a year). The French company is also bidding for as much as 25 percent of Tarko-Sale-based Novatek's project to produce liquefied natural gas on the Yamal Peninsula. The Arctic region, mainly in Russia's zone, holds about a fifth of the world's undiscovered and commercially viable oil and gas reserves, according to U.S. government estimates.<sup>52</sup>

In other developments, Russia has urged the United States of America to refrain from establishing long term military bases in Afghanistan on the grounds that permanent military presence can undermine peace keeping effort and 'anger neighbours'<sup>53</sup>. Russia has in the recent past assisted the United States and NATO in their fight against the Taliban-led insurgency by providing supply routes and weapons for Afghan forces. However, it has ruled out sending its own troops there and stressed that the campaign must not last forever. Russia has also

IRAN

• Two people killed in latest uprising in Iran; Rare meeting held between German Foreign Minister and Iranian President

Reports noted that two people were killed and several others wounded in clashes between protesters and security forces in central Tehran. On February 14, thousands of people gathered at Tehran's Azadi Square in solidarity with the uprisings in Tunisia and Egypt. This was their first major show of dissent since December 2009, when eight people were killed. Reports noted that many protesters chanted "Death to dictators". However, United States President Barack Obama has sharply criticised the Iranian authorities' response. Obama said the US could not dictate what went on inside Iran, but hoped people would have the "courage to be able to express their yearning for greater freedom and a more representative government". However, Iran's president dismissed the protests, saying they had wanted to undermine a rally held last Friday to mark the 32nd anniversary of the Islamic Revolution.<sup>55</sup>

In another development, German government has confirmed that the Foreign Minister Guido Westerwelle held a rare meeting with Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad in Tehran during the release of two German journalists. It was first visit by a German Foreign Minister to Iran since before Ahmadinejad seized power in 2005. The two journalists, who had been detained since October, 2010 in link with a highly publicized stoning case, were released. However, the German government had dismissed the charges.<sup>56</sup>

IRAQ

- One protester killed in Iraq for demanding better services

One person was killed and 33 wounded in latest clashes between protesters and police in the Northern city of Sulaimaniya. Meanwhile, Iraqi Prime Minister Nuri Al Maliki appealed for peaceful protests. The latest protests took place against local governments and demanding an end to food and power shortages. Unlike anti-government uprisings in other parts of the world, the Iraqi protesters usually have not demanded the overthrow of an elected federal government formed less than two months ago, although some have voiced direct anger at Maliki. Maliki also said "the demonstrations are protected and here I say that the security forces are not allowed to use any force against any demonstration." The clashes occurred when about 1,000 protesters looking to oust the local government and demanding better services stopped in front of the headquarters of the Kurdistan Democratic Party, headed by Iraqi Kurdistan president Masoud Barzani, and began to throw stones.<sup>57</sup>

BAHRAIN, YEMEN

- Protests continue in Bahrain despite offer for dialogue by Government; Protests continue in Yemen, Yemeni President offers for talks with opposition

Reports noted that hundreds of demonstrators are gathered at the Pearl Square in Manama for ninth day protesting against the government and ruling royal family. Earlier on February 19, Bahrain's Crown Prince Shaikh Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa has offered a national dialogue "with all parties" in a conciliatory move to resolve a crisis. The Crown Prince has called on for calm, saying it was "time for dialogue, not fighting". "The dialogue is always open and the reforms continue." He also added that, "This land is for all citizens of Bahrain...We need to call for self-restraint from all sides, the armed forces, security men and citizens." Calling upon the opposition he said that, "I respect Wefaq, as I respect others. Today is the time to sit down and hold a dialogue, not to fight."<sup>58</sup> Meanwhile, opposition groups met on February 20 to formulate a charter of demands and to take part in the dialogue process announced by the government. demonstrations in the capital and the King has expressed his regret for the deaths.

Similarly, thousands of anti-government protesters continue to gather in front of the Sana'a University gate for 11th consecutive day, demanding that the Yemen President, Ali Abdullah Saleh, step down. There have been several clashes between the pro government and the anti-government protesters in the capital. On February 20, President Saleh offered dialogue between his ruling party and the opposition. He stated that, "Dialogue is the best means, not sabotage or cutting off roads. I am ready to sit on the negotiating table and meet their demands if they are legitimate." However, he warned against "infiltrators" seeking to divide Yemenis and sabotage their country."<sup>59</sup> On February 19, riot police fired on protesters in Sana'a, killing one and injuring five others. A total of seven people have been killed since the unrest began.

E. USA

- Reports: US expresses concern as West Asian crisis persists

Reports noted that as public protests spread across West Asian countries like wild fire, the US is getting more concerned with the situation in various countries in West Asia. Meanwhile, Obama administration on Sunday condemned Libya's use of lethal force against peaceful demonstrators, pointing to what it said were "multiple credible" reports that "hundreds of people" had been killed and injured in several days of unrest.<sup>60</sup>
