Editor's Note

All the heads of the SAARC countries except Sheikh Hasina attended the swearing-in ceremony of Narendra Modi led National Democratic alliance (NDA) government. Sheikh Hasina was represented by Bangladesh Jatiya Sangsad Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury. Prime Minister Modi had bilateral discussions with all the leaders on May 27. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Maldives, and Nepal expressed their satisfaction after the first meeting with Modi. While Mahinda Rajapaksa and Nawaz Sharif were positive about their meetings with Modi, outcome of their visits however was not appreciated in Sri Lanka and Pakistan. Sri Lankan media reaction was very positive about Modi's election. They were satisfied about the fact that since NDA got absolute majority, the central government does not have to listen to Tamil Nadu now while formulating its policy towards Sri Lanka. This was clear when Narendra Modi ignored Tamil Nadu protest against invitation to Mahinda Rajapaksa for attending the oath taking ceremony. However, when Modi asked Rajapaksa to implement the 13th amendment during the bilateral discussion on June 27, all the accolades for Modi's victory turned into criticism. In Pakistan also, Nawaz Sharif's meeting with Modi was not taken positively. Imran Khan said that "Nawaz Sharif was treated as school boy". Critics of the government said that he failed to raise the Kashmir issue and could not even managed to meet the Hurriyat conference. Given the nature of Indo-Pakistani relations, this kind of criticism was not very surprising. By extending the invitation to the SAARC members, Modi tried to start a fresh innings with the South Asian neighbours. By inviting the SAARC country Heads of Governments, Modi has sent a message that he wants to reach out to the neighbours, but at the same time he will be assertive if it is required. India's neighbourhood policy faced lots of criticism under previous government as the government failed to sign bilateral agreement with Bangladesh and its relations with Sri Lanka was strained over fishermen and Tamil politics. The increasing Chinese inroads to South Asia were seen with a degree of concern. Its engagement with Pakistan did not bore much fruit as the Pakistan government is yet to provide Non Discriminatory Market Access to India. In spite of the election rhetoric Modi government is going to be closely engaged with immediate neighbours and fighting terrorism, economic integration and connectivity are going to be key features in India's neighbourhood policy.

CA Constitution drafting committee begins its work on statute<sup>57</sup>

The Constitution Drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly (CA) formally began its task of drafting the statute on May 30. Five subcommittees, each serving specific function in the constitution drafting process, have been formed. Each subcommittee can have a maximum of 15 members to study the relevant reports passed by the CA and prepare the first draft of a new constitution. The Drafting Committee is tasked with preparing the draft of the constitution as and when it receives the agreed issues from the full house of the CA on the reports of the last assembly. The disputed issues will be sent to the Political Dialogue and Consensus Committee for consensus building. The modality of state restructuring is likely to be the major bone of contention in the new CA as well with the top leaders of Nepali Congress and UCPN (Maoist) getting into a heated debate during deliberation on the subject. UCPN (Maoist) senior leader Baburam Bhattarai, also the chairman of the CA Political Dialogue and Consensus Committee, said the unitary model, which was built under the command of King Prithivi Narayan Shah out of small principalities by defeating them in wars, must be dissolved in favour of federal setup. Noting that the demand made by one section for carving out provinces even for small ethnic minorities and the call of the other section for eschewing federal model based on ethnicity are both extreme viewpoints, Bhattarai recommended that the country should try to find a middle ground on federalism. He added that economic viability and identity should have equal roles in defining Nepal's federal system. Responding to Bhattarai's view, NC Vice Chairman Ram Chandra Poudel said the nation cannot afford to waste its vital time weighing the pros and cons of dividing Nepal into small principalities in the name of federating the country. Poudel accused Bhattarai of confusing the issue of identity in the federal discourse with dividing Nepal into ethnic states. The NC vice-chairman added that delimiting the country along ethnic lines would only invite trouble and divide the country. Poudel recommended taking a pragmatic approach to resolve the contentious issue on federal setup.

President approves TRC bill<sup>59</sup>

President approved the transitional justice bill on May 11, paving the way for the formation of the Commission on Investigation of Enforced Disappearances, and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC). The Comprehensive Peace Agreement had envisaged the commissions within six months of its signing in 2006. After two earlier attempts by the UCPN (Maoist)-led government, the present coalition of the Nepali Congress and the CPN-UML finally drafted the bill that was passed by a majority in Parliament. The controversy, however, continued to dog the bill since its drafting began—first over the formation of an experts' taskforce and then over the contents. The government had formed a bureaucratic panel to draft the bill, which was ultimately reviewed by a six-member team of political leaders, two members each from the three major political parties—NC, UML and UCPN (Maoist). After Parliament passed the bill last month, the President's Office took two weeks to scan through the bill and approve it. According to President's legal advisor Surya Dhungel, the President took his time consulting the law minister, the attorney general and the law secretary for clarity. The bill has now become an Act, but the provisions of amnesty and reconciliation remain controversial. While the government is adamant on reconciliation, victims' groups object to amnesty for perpetrators of grave human rights violation.

A key faction of the Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) announced that it was splitting from the militant outfit following bloody clashes with a rival group. The break-away faction belongs to the Mehsud tribe, widely considered the most important of the various groups that comprise the umbrella TTP which has fought the Pakistani government since 2007. Azam Tariq, a spokesman for the group, said the breakaway faction would be led by Khalid Mehsud, famously known by the name of Khan Said alias Sajna. Khalid Mehsud was a key ally of former Mehsud Taliban chief and former TTP number two Waliur Rehman Mehsud, who was killed in a US drone strike in May last year. Two factions of the TTP, the umbrella grouping for disparate militant organisations, have been locked in bloody clashes for the past several weeks. Differences emerged in the militant organisation after former chief Hakimullah Mehsud was killed by a US drone in November last year and a crisis developed over the future leadership of the group. Khalid Mehsud was a contender for the TTP's top slot after Hakimullah's death, but the post eventually was handed to Maulana Fazlullah who hails from the Swat valley and is the first non-Mehsud to lead the TTP. The conflict brought those backing Khalid Mehsud against supporters of Taliban commander Sheheryar Mehsud, who claim to be the followers of the late Hakimullah Mehsud.
