On the cover

A Taiwanese reconnaissance soldier controls a locally made tactical short-range surveillance UAV during a deep battle exercise in July 2025. This month JDIR looks at the new technology Taiwan displayed at TADTE 2025 and how the country is embracing its asymmetric-centred concept of denial, not control.

Contents

Present Danger

- 7 European Military Autonomy: What Comes First? Barry R. Posen
Worst-case assumptions can as easily paralyse as mobilise, but Europe should at least start with bad-case assumptions: an unreliable United States and Russia's prompt recovery from its Ukraine exertions.
- 29 Europe Resolved: The Drumbeat of Strategic Autonomy Erik Jones
For the Trump administration, no source of leverage is unexploitable and no connection across policy domains is out of bounds; Europeans have no choice but to respond.

Commentary

- 45 The Risk and Reward of Preventive Strikes Against Iran Michael Eisenstadt
As long as Tehran believes rebuilding its nuclear programme is likely to prompt another Israeli or American military response, it is likely to defer it.
- 57 The United States vs Brazil: Tariffs and Punishment Irene Mia
The US may end up accelerating the very multipolarity it seeks to forestall by enhancing the appeal of diversifying trade and of reforming and reviving multilateral systems.
- 66 Noteworthy: Putin in from the Cold

Palestine at the Abyss

- 69 Reclaiming Strategic Purpose in Palestinian Politics Anas Iqtait
Unless the structural order that arose from the Oslo process is challenged, Palestinian politics will be reduced to ritualised competition over diminishing resources continually eroded by Israeli colonisation.
- 87 Failure of Containment: Israel's Gaza Withdrawal After 20 Years Rob Geist Pinfold
Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu pursued the same goal as the 2005 Gaza disengagement that he has decried – indefinitely freezing the conflict – and created conditions conducive to the 7 October 2023 attacks.
- 103 Hunger as a Weapon, Present and Past Martino Tognocchi
The difficulty of proving specific intent to cause hunger and famine, and international bodies' lack of enforcement mechanisms even if it is proven, leave considerable room for bad actors to manoeuvre.

On the cover
Palestinians struggle to receive hot meals distributed by a charity in Gaza City, Gaza, on 27 August 2025.

Nuclear Possibilities for Germany and France

115 Germany's Nuclear Options Eckhard Lübke

A French nuclear commitment to Germany – a 'nuclear Aachen' – offers the most viable starting point for establishing extended deterrence.

133 Lost in Translation? France's Nuclear Policy and European Security Anna Bartoux

Allies probably would not find a French commitment to extend deterrence to them without basing any weapons on their territory credible, yet France lacks the capabilities to engage in US-style nuclear sharing.

151 The Renegade Within: NATO's American Dilemma Eyal Rubinson

Retaining an enduring US commitment to European security means preparing for it to end by ensuring that European military capabilities alone can sustain deterrence.

165 Switzerland's Neutrality Crisis Marcel Berni and Marco Jorio

Strict neutrality is not required to preserve Switzerland's international stature, and a more nuanced stance of cooperative neutrality may serve to enhance it.

207 Human Textures: The Personal as Geopolitical Nigel Gould-Davies

While orthodox strategic arguments hover in the background, Trump himself speaks of international relations in visceral, tactile, intimate terms rather than bloodless abstractions of interest and values.

5 PROVOCATIONS

7 Trump's Nuclear Views: Understanding the US Strikes on Iran

■ Rachel Elizabeth Whitlark

Looking back before he became president, Donald Trump gave us reason to suspect that he would consider and potentially use force against Iran's nuclear program. Looking back not only helps us better contextualize this summer's strikes; it is worth paying careful attention to what other future leaders globally think about nuclear weapons in world politics long before they enter national executive office to help understand potential future counterproliferation events.

25 The Old Logic Behind China's New Economic Weapons

■ Viking Bohman, Audrye Wong, and Victor A. Ferguson

When, how, and why does China use economic sanctions? The authors documented over 200 individual cases imposed between 2010 and 2025, concluding that contrary to a wave of recent analyses, Beijing is using both old and new sanctions methods. When, how, and why is China using this combination of old and new coercive economic tactics?

47 Small Modular Reactors: The Coming Wave of Nuclear Energy Competition

■ Lami Kim

Nuclear energy is making a strong comeback, with small modular reactors emerging as a key technology, yet the US is already falling behind Russia and China in their development of reactors and fuel supply. What can the US do to reverse this trend in a competition with significant first-mover advantages for global nuclear governance and geopolitical influence?

69 India-US Relations: Pakistan Re-emerges in Trump 2.0

■ Harsh V. Pant and Vivek Mishra

Trump's opportunistic meddling in the India-Pakistan conflict since May this year has reflected a pivot in US Pakistan policy, which New Delhi worries may alter the axial relations with Washington cultivated over the last two decades. Three variables will determine the impact of Trump's Pakistan outreach on the future India-US relationship.

87 NUCLEAR ASIA?

89 Further Enhancing US Extended Deterrence for South Korea

■ Kyung Suk Lee and Bee Yun Jo

Voices in Seoul continue to question the credibility of US extended deterrence given North Korean nuclear advancements. The authors argue for advancing conventional-nuclear integration between the two allies to enhance extended deterrence. Otherwise, given the deterioration of Washington's defense commitments, advocacy for an independent South Korean nuclear arsenal is likely to rise.

109 Japan's Nuclear Balance: Deterrence and Disarmament

■ Ryoya Ishimoto

Japan has struggled to strike a balance between nuclear deterrence and disarmament. Since the 1950s, Tokyo has developed its nuclear policy by prioritizing issues according to the prevailing international security environment. Today, that environment necessitates prioritizing nuclear deterrence, but history has shown that these goals can coexist and gradually advance in tandem.

127 Escalation Risks Rising? Airpower in Kargil and Pahalgam

■ Sumit Ganguly and Spenser A. Warren

In the 1999 Kargil conflict, the Indian Air Force in the end acquitted itself admirably; in the 2025 Pahalgam case, the IAF's performance appeared to be lackluster at best. What explains the markedly different outcomes of the use of air-power? And what strategic lessons did India learn? One to watch is New Delhi likely concluded that, next time, they must escalate to strikes against military targets at the onset of hostilities, running greater Pakistani miscalculation risks.

I45 THE FUTURE OF INTELLIGENCE

147 The War on Open-Source Intelligence

■ Thomas Colley and Huw Dylan

Open-source intelligence (OSINT) investigations have proven extremely effective over the last decade to expose military aggression, war crimes, human rights violations, and corruption worldwide. But actions generate reactions, in this case a seven-pronged counter-offensive to attack and undermine the transparency industry.

163 Recalibrating the Five Eyes Alliance

■ Mitchell Gallagher

The Five Eyes Alliance, long lauded as a paragon of intelligence cooperation, is at a crossroads: innovate or become obsolete. A larger circle of members could infuse vital new capabilities to a historical alliance challenged by three interlocking forces—geography, transnationalism, and new technologies—but such a move risks diluting the hard-won trust that has been the alliance's cornerstone since 1946. Phased selective enlargement could provide an answer.
